HUNGARY FREE FOR 43 YEARS

ADEN, APRIL 4, ANA-MP

Forty-Three years ago- on April 4, 1945- the entire territory of Hungary was liberated. That was the day when the Soviet Army drove out the last of the German Fascist occupiers and their Hungarian arrowcross henchmen from the country. April 4th is now the National Day of the Hungarian people's Republic.

The military Liberation of the country created the possibility for democratic advancement.

Hungary was proclaimed a Republic on February 1, 1946. The "Kingdom without a King" became a Republic of the People. Economic and Financial stabilisation produced results in a short time. The leftists Parties wished to put democratic transformation on a Socialist course.

The National elections of 1947 proved the Hungarian Communist Party the strongest group of the country. In June 1948 the two Workers Parties-the Communists and the Social Democrats-merged. The big Banks were Nationalized in November 1947-and this was already a sign of the left gaining ground. At Later 1948 the Nationalization of Industrial establishment employing over a hundred workers followed. Thus, 1948 went on record as "The year of the Change" in Hungarian history as it marked the beginning of Socialist development. The New Construction was framed in 1949.

During the past Quarter of the Century, Hungary has gone through considerable transformation. By the end of the Sixties of the Socialist transformation of the country became an accomplished fact. Hungarian agriculture has been considerably successful, not only ensuring supplies to the population on a high level but also contributing a significant part of Hungary's Exports. Industrial development has continued with the application of up-to-date scientific and technological results.

The economic reform introduced in 1968 and still going on - though with some jolts and halts - has since then entered a new phase and is serving further development. Apart from economic growth, these decades were also a time of furthering socialist democracy in Hungary.

The past few years made it clear that the restructuring of the National economy according to the requirements of intensive development could no longer be delayed.

Hungary is now the scene of social stability, political equilibrium and a readiness for renewal, acceptance of the need for change.

The last decade has seen a reshuffling of the political and economic lines of force in the world. New forms of cooperation, price and value relations have come into being. These changes constitute problems even for countries much more advanced than Hungary. The Hungarian response to the challenge of international economy, so to make the country catch up economically and keep in mind the social welfare aims, too the National Assembly adopted the working programme of the new Government built on the HSWP programme for economic stabilization and advancement.
